Press Release

Local Charlotte Woman Starts a Homeschool Resource Website.

Charlotte, NC
September 8, 2008

Charlotte Area Homeschooler, Gina Grothoff, establishes a website to provide the resources, place and knowledge to help homeschoolers. The website especially supports those new to homeschooling or still deciding if homeschooling is the right thing for their children.

The diversity of information and homeschoolers gives any newbie homeschooler a chance to compare styles, techniques and testimonies of homeschooling our children.

Forums, groups and discussions allow newbies the opportunity to calm their normal fears about homeschooling, active homeschoolers to feel a part of something bigger while sharing experiences and veteran homeschoolers a chance to impart knowledge of their years of homeschooling experience to others.

"To me homeschooling starts at birth," states Grothoff, "so it is only natural to continue when they become school age."

Grothoff now wants to help other homeschoolers using the knowledge and experience she has gained in her 7 years of homeschooling. She follows more of a un-schooling philosophy with her children yet feels open to what ever fits each homeschooling family's style.

That is why Charlotte Homeschooling is open to all homeschoolers and provides such a broad spectrum of information.
